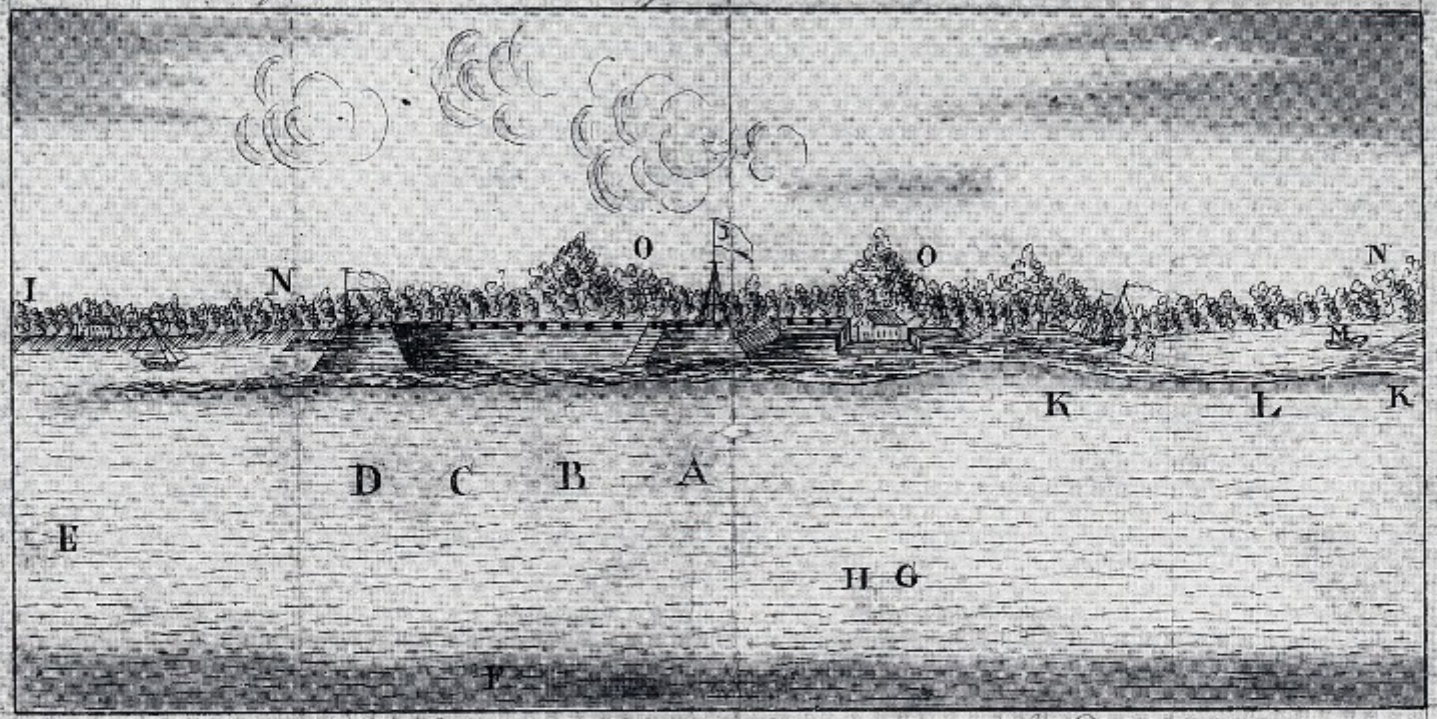
Remarks — The Platform in this Fort carried Nine Pieces of Cannon, Three Nuting 32 and 18 Pounders, the Line upon the Curtain of the Bastions Two, on Each of the Two Flanks, and Seven in the Curtain — The Cannon in the Battery at the Point of Cannon, and the Mortar, beyond the West Bastion, and the One piece of Cannon, on a Redoubt on Sullivans Island — N.B. The Thickness of the Merlons, were 18 feet, and the Length of the Rest, from the Salient Angle of the West to that of the East Bastion, 350 feet. The whole Work strong and well Bended



A. N.B. A View the Rebels Fort, on the West End of Sullivans Island, with the Disposition of the Fleet, Commanded by Commodore Sir Peter Parker Knt &c &c During the Attack, on the 28th of June 1776 which lasted Four hours and five minutes. A. The Active, B. The Bristol Frigate, The Ship C. The Experiment, D. The Solebay, E. The Sphinx, F. The Sphynx & Acteon, armed, G. The Bomb, H. The Friendship Armed Ship to cover the Bomb, I. Point of Wood, Neck, K. Sullivans Island, L. Marrow Bones, M. Cove Creek, N. The Continent, O. The Myrtle Grove.

British Engineer, "View of the Rebels' Fort, British Public Record Office, 1776," in Terry W. Lipscomb's The Carolina Lowcountry, April 1775, June 1776 and the Battle of FortMoultrie, 2nd Edition. Columbia: South Carolina Department of Archives and History, 1994. 28.