

The Southeastern Native Americans hunted animals and grew vegetables to meet their needs. They lived in villages with many families and had a winter home and a summer home. They celebrated many things with special ceremonies.